Once upon a time, I would have considered an adventure like this. Now, as a post-spinal-injury armchair traveler, it's stories like Trevelyan Edward's Trail Magic that feeds my wanderlust. With the tight personal prose, practical musings and great images, you're almost along for the trek with him. Even my 16 year old son, not known for physical adventures, had this to say about Trail Magic: "Trail Magic is witty, personal and humorous. It's a great easy-to-read travelogue that feels like a like a 1-1 conversation at times." I thoroughly recommend this and Trevelyan's earlier adventure book 'Cycling Solo'
